In my house, on my beach,
or from my kyack,
I watch the Bird Islands.
Five-million come back to nest on high ledges above where waves break - murres, razorbills, puffins, gulls and kittiwakes.
Plus zillions of land-birds zoom past in the air - loud bluejays, red robins, and crows everywhere.
Add finches and grosbeaks and redpohls, and more small, scrappy, fat juncos than I can keep score.

The forests have black bears, the Barrens have moose - (In fact most the Island the mooses are loose!) Look hard and you'll see a few grey caribou, or fieldmice, brown rabbits wild mink or a shrew.

I walk on my beach on a summery day underfoot pebbles click and slide out of my way, I kick at the waves and they fly in the air making diamond tiarras that land on my hair.

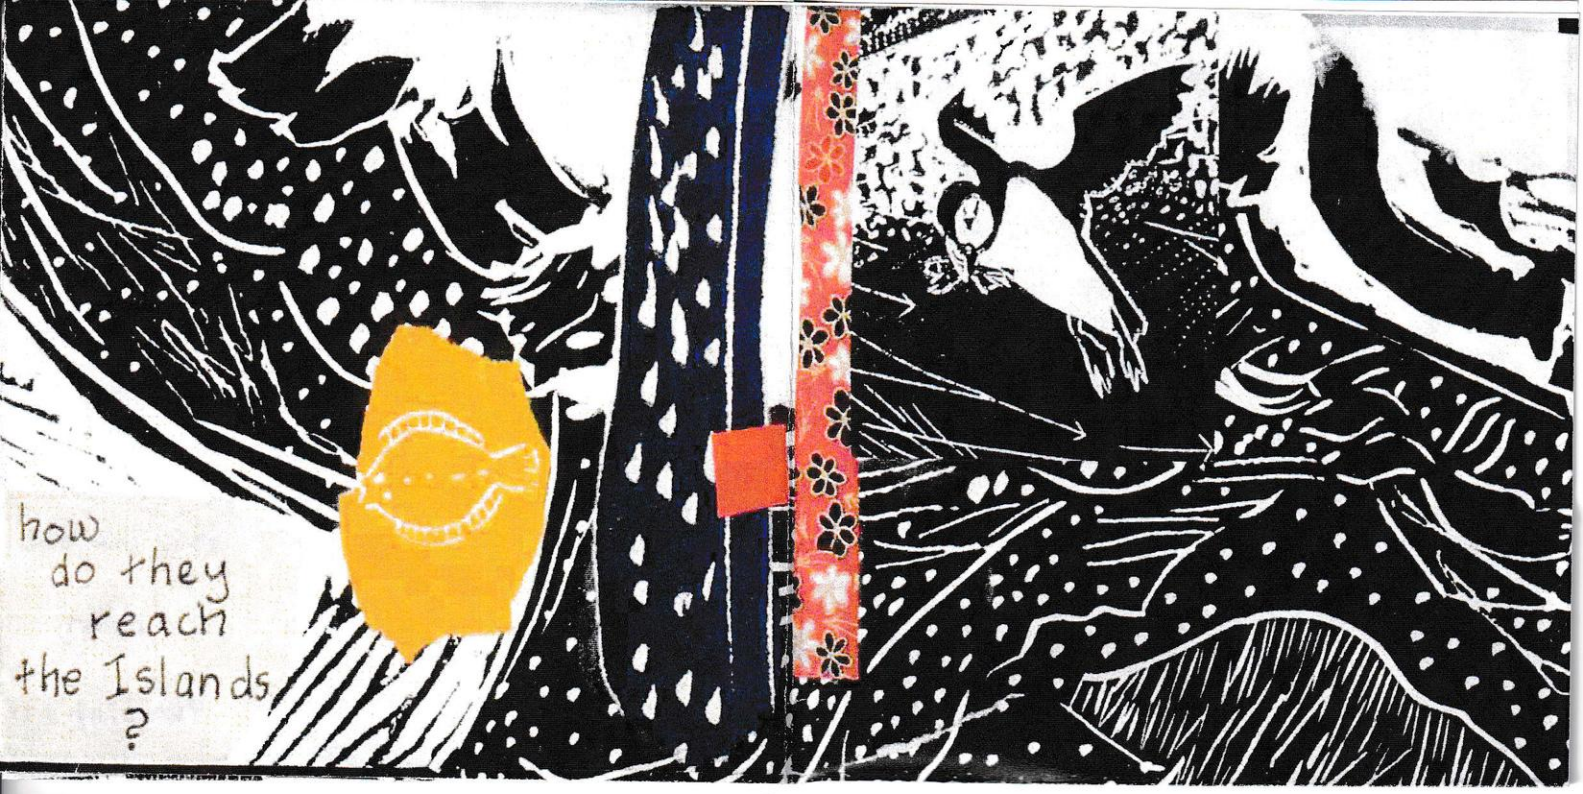

crows

if crows cannot float or swim.....

And certainly don't have boats.
And if crows are therefore fearful of crossing over water.....

how do they reach the Islands

A sand-dollar's rough but it has its own star A clamshell looks rumpled from digging down far but inside are rainbows, white, yellow and brown, While snail shells, like whirlpools, go round and around.
